

Westminster Announces Changes in Show Limit and Judging For 2012

The Westminster Kennel Club today announced a number of changes for its annual show on February 13 and 14, 2012 at Madison Square Garden in New York City. These changes were made necessary because of the ongoing renovation work at the Garden.

Most notable of these changes is a reduced show limit of 2,000 entries, a direct result of the loss of benching space in the Expo Center during the renovation project. The entry limit had changed on occasion since the show's inception in 1877, but it has been 2,500 since 1982. That entry limit has always been reached very quickly each year.

"We are encouraged that, upon completion, the Garden's renovation will provide more benching space and an efficient setup for our show," said Westminster Show Chairman Thomas H. Bradley. "But for now, we have to make some adjustments that are in the best interests of the dogs and the competitors, while continuing to provide reasonable access for spectators, as well."

Entry procedures will remain the same as in recent years, with the top five dogs in each breed or variety (in breed points for the first ten months of 2011) being invited to pre-enter, with the remaining entry slots being filled in an open process. There are 185 breeds and varieties eligible for Westminster in 2012. Entry rules will be available in the Premium List posted on the Westminster website in October.

The Club also announced that all breed judging and benching for the Toy breeds on Monday and the Terrier breeds on Tuesday will take place in the theater in the Madison Square Garden complex. Preliminary judging in Junior Showmanship will also take place in the theater.

All Group competition and the Junior Showmanship finals will still be held in the main arena.

The exhibitor entrance for all dogs remains the same as in the past.

The Alternative Benching Format first used in 2011 will once again have breeds groomed at their benching areas. Additional details will be available on the website and in the Premium List, and diagrams will be mailed with the Judging Program.

Unique Treatment for Shelties

When eight-year-old Piper suffered an attack by another dog recently, she was left with a deep wound that would not heal. After four unsuccessful surgeries, Dr. Andrew Turkell decided to treat her with hyperbaric oxygen at the Calusa Veterinary Center in Boca Raton, Florida. This process consisted of ten sessions over two weeks. Each session lasted a little longer than an hour. Dr. Turkell said that Piper would come to two atmospheres of pressure, which is the equivalent of being 33 feet under water, and would be breathing 100 percent oxygen.

Dr. Turkell said that this treatment is "very, very unique for animals," and there are probably fewer than six facilities offering hyperbaric oxygen therapy for small animals in the country.

Piper not only responded well to this treatment, but her wound has healed.
